

On February 17, 2011, a supporter advocating for worker rights waves a sign as thousands of citizens, teachers, union workers and University of Wisconsin-Madison faculty, staff and students gathered for a third day inside the Wisconsin State Capitol rotunda to continue protesting a budget repair bill proposed by Governor Scott Walker. The proposed bill requires state employees to make increased contributions to their pensions and health insurance premiums, and removes many union workers' rights by making significant changes in the state's collective bargaining laws.
